Mr. and Mrs. H. O'Sell spent Saturday and Sunday at Chest Haven.

Marion Hope of Point Marion visited friends here Saturday.

Charles Smith, who is sick, fever, at home in South Union township. He is a student at the Unifontown high school and was due to promotion this term.

Mr. John Bogardus of Point Marion was the guest of Miss Nell Ryan for the week end.

J. and H. P. Sutton were Unifontown business visitors Monday.

Crump at their regular monthly meeting made the borough tax levy for the coming month. He also reported the borough with a view to reputation in the borough industries.

The millage was fixed at 1 mill. 1 mill for streets and 1 mill for lights. This will give an annual street levy of 1 mill and a light levy of 1 mill for the same purpose last year. This ought to give about $100 to go to the light. This with $200 due on the light duplicate would wipe out the debt of the borough.

St. Matthews, Pease Station, Sunday, by its convention will convene in the Methodist Episcopal Church here on Saturday morning, April 17. There will be a morning and afternoon ses-

ed to all the attending delegates

French Remedy Aids Stomach Sufferers

France has been called the nation without stomach troubles. The French have a secret—there is a simple mixture of vegetable oils that relieve stomach and intestinal ailments and keep the bowels free from foul, poisonous matter. The stomach is left to perform its functions normally. Indigestion and gastric distress vanish.

Mr Geo H. Mayr, a leading druggist of Chicago, cured himself with this remedy in a short time. The demand is so great that he has shipped these oils from France and compounds them under the name of Mayr's Wonderful Remedy. People everywhere write and testify to the marvelous relief they have received using this remedy—One will rid the body of poisonous accretions that have accumulated for years and convince the most chronic sufferer from stomach, liver or intestinal troubles.

Mayr's Wonderful Remedy is sold by leading druggists everywhere with the positive understanding that your money will be refunded without question or quibble if ONE bottle fails to give you

HOMESTEADS OFFERED

The United States Reclamation Service is anxious to obtain and available the better part of April a large number of desirable homesteads in the well known Shoshone National project near Yellowstone National Park, Wyoming. This opening will make it possible for the public to obtain this land and will afford an excellent opportunity for the section homemaker to secure a desirable lot on 80-acre tract under the homestead law in a district of proven agricultural worth.

According to an announcement issued by Albert V. Leonard, settlement agent of the United States Reclamation Service in the Federal Building, the government during the past several years has been awarded 100,000 acres for suitable agricultural homesteads and the opening of the Shoshone lands will in a measure appraise the demand for habitable tracts.

"There is no question but that the recent peculiar business and economic conditions have been largely responsible for the increasing demand for another widespread interest in the back to the land movement," states the announcement.

"The government is desirous of encouraging this laudable movement in every proper way and seeks to make readily available information concerning the opportunities which exist for the homemaker in the Shoshone project. The Shoshone opening will attract ar industrious class of people who will maintain the high standard of production."

SOAP IS BAD FOR THE HAIR

Soap should be used very sparingly at all, if you want to keep your hair looking its best. Most soaps and prepared shampoos contain too much alkali. This dries the scalp, makes the hair brittle, and runs it out.

The best thing for everyday use is just ordinary refined coconut oil (which is pure and greaseless), is cheaper and better than soap or anything else you can use.

One or two teaspoonsful will cleanse the hair and scalp thoroughly. Simply moisten the hair with water and rub it in. It makes an abundance of rich, creamy lather, which rinses out easily, removing every particle of dirt, dandruff and excessive oil. The hair dries quickly, and evenly, and it leaves the scalp soft, and the hair fine and silky, bright, lustrous, fluffy and easy to manage.

You can get multised coconut oil at any pharmacy, and a few ounces will supply every member of the family for months.

CHAPTER XXII.

Into the Desert.

A week after the caravan of the Duc de Tremont left Algiers, Julia had found her way to the villa of Madame de la Malne at an early morning hour. Madame de la Malne saw her standing on the threshold of her bedroom door.

"There, Madame," Julia said, "I am leaving today with a dragoon and twenty servants to go into the desert."

Madame de la Malne was still in bed. At nine o'clock she read her papers and her correspondence.

"Into the desert—alone?"

Julia, with her cravat in her gloved hands, smiled sweetly though she was very pale. "I had not thought of going alone, Madame," she replied with charming assurance, "I knew you would go with me."

On a chair by her bed was a wrapper of blue silk and lace. The countess sprang up and then thrust her feet into her slippers and stared at Julia.

"What are you going to do in the desert?"

"Watch."

"You, yes?" nodded Madame de la Malne. "And your aunt?"

"She is in a better for the hospital," smiled Miss Redmond.

Madame de la Malne regarded her slender friend with admiration and envy. "Why hadn't I thought of it?" she said for her maid.

"Because your great-grandfather was not a pioneer!" Miss Redmond answered.

"The sun which, all day long, held the desert in its burning embrace, went westward to his own brilliant caravan."

Julia's Eyes Were Fixed Upon the Limitless Sands.

"The desert blossoms like a rose, Theresa!"

"Like a rose?" questioned Madame de la Malne.

She was sitting in the door of her tent, her white dress and her white hat gleamed like a touch of snow upon the desert's face. Julia Redmond, on a rug at her feet, and in her khaki riding habit the color of the sand, blended with the desert as though part of it. She sat up as she spoke.

"How divine! See!" She pointed to the stretches of the Sahara before her. On every side they spread away as far as the eye could reach, mellow, yellow, black, undulating finally to small hillocks with corrugated sides, as a group of little sandhills rose softly out of the endless plain. "Look, Theresa!"

Slowly, from ether and gold the color changed; a faint wavy blue crept over the sands, which reddened, paled, faded, warmed again, took depth and grew intense like flame.

"The heart of a rose! N'est-ce pas, Theresa?"

"Understand now what you mean," said Madame de la Malne. The countess was not a dreamer. Parisian to the tip of her fingers, elegant, fine she had lived a conventional life. Theresa had been taught to conceal her emotions. She had been taught that her feelings were very little to any one but ourselves. She had been taught to go lightly, to avoid serious things. Her great-grandfather had none lightly to the scaffold, exquisitely courteous till the last.

"I ask your pardon if I jostled you in the tumbler," the old countess had said to her companion on the way to the guillotine. "The springs of the cart are poor"—and she went up smiling.

In the companionship of the American girl, Theresa de la Malne had thrown off restraint. If the Marquise d'Esclignac had felt Julia's influence, Theresa de la Malne, being near her own age, echoed Julia's very feeling.

Except for the dragoon and their servant, the two women were alone in the desert.

Smiling at Julia, Madame de la Malne said: "I haven't been so far from the Rue de la Paix in my life."

"How can you speak of the Rue de la Paix, Theresa?"

"Only to show you how completely I have left it behind."

Julia's eyes were fixed upon the limitless sands, a sea where a faint line lost itself in the red west and the horizon shut from her sight everything that she believed to be her life.

"This is the seventh day, Theresa!"

"Already you are as brown as an Arab, Julia!"

"You are well, ma chere amie!"

"Robert does not like dark women," said the Countess de la Malne, and rubbed her cheek. "I must wear two veils."

"Look, Theresa!"

Across the face of the desert the glow began to withdraw its curtain. The sand's surface an ineffable hue, a shell-like pink took possession, and the desert melted and then grew colder—it waxed before their eyes, withered like a tree.

"Like a rose!" Julia murmured, "small its perfume!" She lifted her head drinking in with delight the fragrance of the sands.

"Ma chere Julia," gently protested the countess, lifting her head, "perfume, Julia!" But she breathed with her friend, while a sweetly subtle, intoxicating odor, as of millions and millions of roses, gathered, warmed, kept, then rested on the air of heaven, intoxicating her.

To the left were the huddled tents of their attendants. No sound had the sun gone down than the Arabs came, moved to sing—a song that Julia had repeatedly liked:

Love is like a sweet perfume,
It comes, it comes,
When it's present, it is so sweet,
When it's absent, it is like tears.
Love is like a sweet perfume,
It comes, it comes,
When it's present, it is so sweet,
When it's absent, it is like tears.

The word music filled the silence of the silent place. It had the vasescent quality of the wind that brought the breath of the sand flowers. The voices of the Arabs, not unmusical, though hoarse and appealing, cried out their love song, and then the music turned to invocation and to prayer.

The two women listened silently as the night fell, their figures sharply outlined in the beautiful clarity of the eastern night.

Julia stood upright. In her severe khaki dress, she was as slender as a reed. She remained looking toward the horizon, immovable, patient, a silent watcher over the uncommunicative wastes.

"Perhaps," she thought, "there is nothing really beyond that line, so fast blotting itself into night—and yet I seem to see them come!"

Madame de la Malne, in the door of her tent, immovable, her hands clasped around her knees, look affectionately at the young girl before her. Julia was a delight to her. She was carried away by her, by her frank simplicity, and drawn to her warm and generous heart. Madame de la Malne had her own story. She wondered what there was, for any period of her conventional life, she could have thrown everything aside and stood out with the man she loved.

Julia, standing before her, a dark slim figure in the night—isolated and alone—recalled the figurehead of a ship, its face toward heaven, pioneering the open sea.

Julia watched, indeed. On the desert there is the brilliant day, a passionate glow, and the nightfall. They passed the nights sometimes listening for a cry that should herald an approaching caravan, sometimes hearing the wild cry of the hyenas, or of a passing cat-ture on his horrid flight. Otherwise, until the camp stirred with the dawn and the only prayer-call sounded "Allah! Allah!" into the stillness, they were wrapped in complete silence.

CHAPTER XXIII.

Two Love Stories.

If it had not been for her absorbing thought of Sabron, Julia would have revelled in the desert and the new experience. As it was, its charm and magic and the fact that he traveled over it helped her to endure the interval.

In the deep impenetrable silence she seemed to hear her future "speak" to her. She believed that it would either be a wonderfully happy one, or a hopelessly withered life.

"Julia, I cannot ride any farther!" exclaimed the countess.

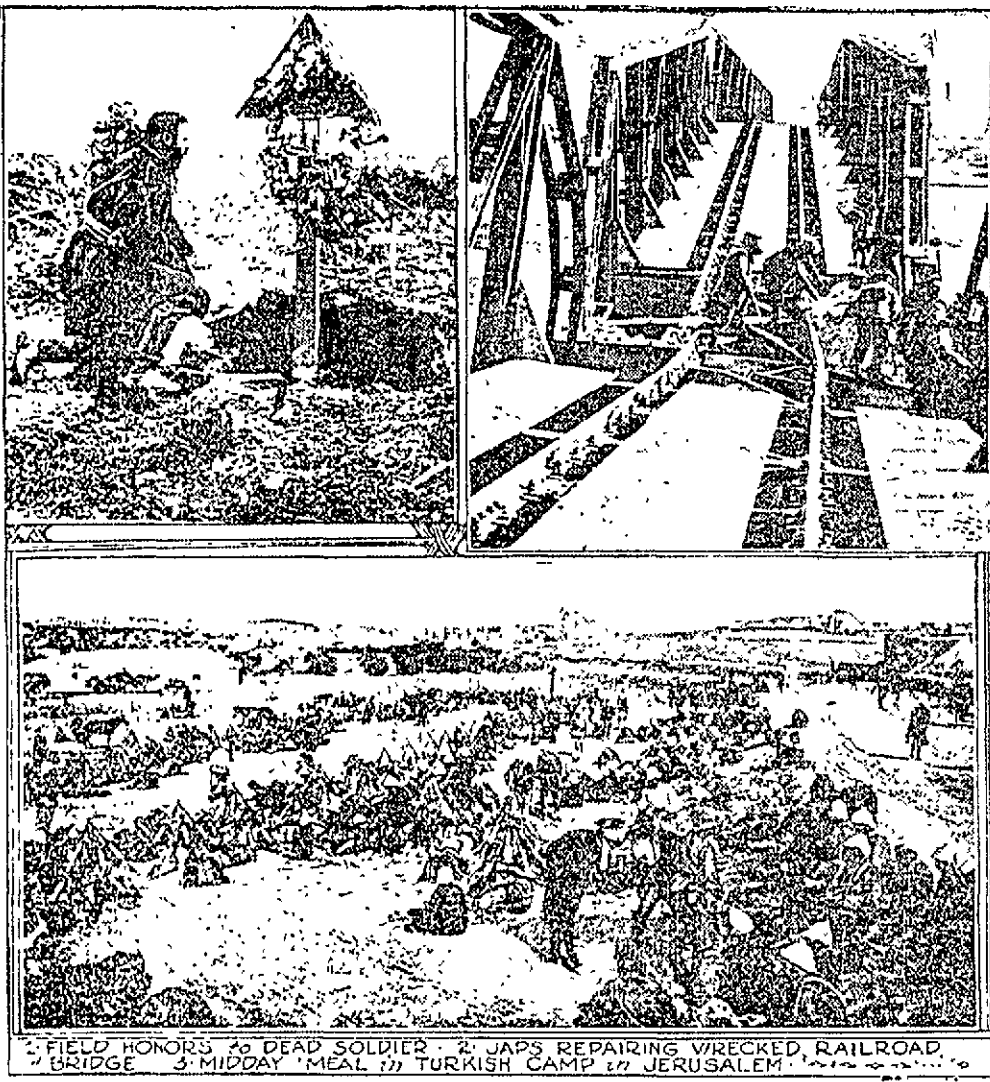

She was an excellent horsewoman and had ridden all her life, but her riding of late had consisted of a canter in the Bois de Boulogne at noon, and it was sometimes hard to follow Julia's tireless gallop toward an ever-disappearing goal.

"Forgive me," said Miss Redmond, and brought her horse up to her friend's side.

It was the cool of the day, of the fourteenth day since Tremont had left Algiers and the seventh day of Julia's excursion. A fresh wind blew from the west, lifting their veils from their helmets and bringing the fragrance of the mimosa into whose scented forest they had ridden. The sky paled to ward sunset, and the evening star, second in glory only to the moon, hung over the west.

Although both women knew perfectly well the reason for this excursion and its importance, not one word had been spoken between them of Sabron and Tremont other than a natural interest and anxiety.

They might have been two hospital nurses awaiting their patients.

They halted their horses, looking over toward the western horizon and its mystery.

"The star shines over their caravan," mused Madame de la Malne (Julia had not thought Theresa poetical), "as though to lead them home."

Madame de la Malne turned her face and Julia saw tears in her eyes. The Frenchwoman's control was usually perfect, she treated most things with mocking gaiety. The bright noisiness of her eyes touched Julia.

"Theresa!" exclaimed the American girl. "It is only fourteen days!"

Madame de la Malne laughed. There was a break in her voice. "Only fourteen days," she repeated, "and any one of those days may mean death!"

She threw back her head, touched her stallion, and flew away like light, and it was Julia who first drew rein.

"Theresa! Theresa! We cannot go any farther!"

"Lady!" said Azrael. He drew his big black horse up beside them. "We must go back to the tents."

Madame de la Malne pointed with her whip toward the horizon. "It is cruel! It ever recedes!"

"Tell me, Julia, of Monsieur de Sabron," asked Madame de la Malne abruptly.

"There is nothing to tell, Theresa."

"You don't trust me?"

"Do you think that, really?"

In the tent where Azrael served them their meal, under the ceiling of Turkish red with its Arabic characters in clear white, Julia and Madame de la Malne sat while their coffee was served them by a Syrian servant.

"A girl does not come into the Sahara and watch like a sentinel, does not suffer as you have suffered, ma chere, without there being something to tell."

"It is true," said Miss Redmond, "and would you be with me, Theresa, if I did not trust you? And what do you want me to tell?" she added naively.

The countess laughed. "Vous êtes charmante, Julia!"

"I met Monsieur de Sabron," said Julia slowly, "not many months ago in Tarascon. I saw him several times, and then he went away."

"And then?" urged Madame de la Malne eagerly.

"He left his little dog, Pithoune, with me, and Pithoune can after his master, to Marseilles, singing himself into the water, and was rescued by the sailors. I wrote about it to Monsieur de Sabron, and he answered me from the desert, the night before he went into battle."

"And that's all?" urged Madame de la Malne.

"That's all," said Miss Redmond. She drank her coffee.

"You tell a love story very badly, ma chere."

"Is it a love story?"

"Have you come to Africa for charity?"

"Voyons!"

Julia was silent. A great reserve seemed to seize her heart, to stiffen her as the poverty of her love story struck her. She sat turning her coffee spoon between her fingers, her even downcast. She had very little to tell. She might never have any more to tell. Yet this was her love story. But the presence of Sabron was so real, and she saw his eyes clearly looking upon her as she had seen them often; heard the sound of his voice that meant but one thing—and the words of his letter came back to her. She remembered her letter to him, rescued from the field where he had fallen. She raised her eyes to the Countess de la Malne, and there was an appeal in them.

At Night They Sat Out in the Moonlight.

The Frenchwoman leaned over and kissed Julia. She asked nothing more. She had not learned her lessons in discretion to no purpose.

At night they sat out in the moonlight, white as day, and the radiance over the sands was like the snow-flowers. Wrapped in their warm coverings, Julia and Theresa de la Malne lay on the rugs before the door of their tent, and above their heads shone the stars so low that it seemed as though their hands could snatch them from the sky. At a little distance their servants sat around the dying fire, and there came to them the plaintive song of Azrael, as he led their slings.

And who can give again the love of yesterday?

Can a whirlwind replace the sand after it is stirred?

What can heal the heart that Allah has smitten?

Can the mirage form again when there are no oases to see?

"I was married," said Madame de la Malne, "when I was sixteen."

Julia drew a little nearer and smiled to herself in the shadow.

This would be a real love story, older than the history of her country, ma chere, and I had no dot. Robert de Tremont and I used to play together in the albert of the park, on the terrace. When his mother brought him over when she called on my grandmother, he teased me horribly because the weeds grew between the stones of our terrace. He was very rude.

"Throughout our childhood, until I was sixteen, we teased each other and fought and quarreled."

"This is not a love-story, Theresa," said Miss Redmond.

"There are all kinds, ma chere, as there are all temperaments," said Madame de la Malne. "At Assumption—that is our great feast, Julia—the Feast of Mary—it comes in August—at Assumption, Monsieur de la Malne came to talk with my grandmother. He was forty years old, and bald—Rob and I made fun of his few hairs, like the children in the Holy Bible."

Julia put out her hand and took the hand of Madame de la Malne gently. She was getting so far from a love affair.

"I married Monsieur de la Malne in six weeks," said Theresa.

"Oh," breathed Miss Redmond, "horrible!"

Madame de la Malne pressed Julia's hand.

"When it was decided between my grandmother and the countess, I escaped at night, after they thought I had gone to bed, and I went down to the lower terrace where the weeds grew in plenty, and told Robert. Somehow, I did not expect him to make fun. Although we always joked about everything until this night. It was after nine o'clock."

The countess swept one hand toward the desert. "A moon like this—only not like this—ma chere. There was never but that moon to me for many years."

"I thought at first that Rob would kill me—he grew so white and terrible. He seemed suddenly to hate aged ten years. I will never forget his cry as it rang out in the night. 'You will marry that old man when we love each other?' I had never known it until then."

"We were only children, but he grew suddenly old. I knew it then," said Madame de la Malne intensely. "I know it then."

She waited for a long time. Over the face of the desert there seemed to be nothing but one veil of light. The silence grew so intense, so deep; the Arabs had stopped singing, but the heart fairly echoed, and Julia grew meditative—before her eyes the caravan she waited for seemed to come out of the moonlit mist, rocking, rocking—the camels and the huddled figures of the riders, their shadows cast upon the sand.

And now Tremont would be forever changed in her mind. A man who had suffered from his youth, a warm-hearted boy, debarred of his early love. It seemed to her that he was a charming figure to lead Sabron.

"Theresa," she murmured, "won't you tell me?"

"They thought I had gone to bed," said the Countess de la Malne, "and I went back to my room by a little staircase, seldom used, and I found myself alone, and I knew what life was and what it meant to be poor."

"But," interrupted Julia, horrified, "girls are not sold in the twentieth century."

"They are sometimes in France, my dear. Robert was only seventeen. His father laughed at him, threatened to send him to South America. We were victims."

"It was the harvest moon," continued Madame de la Malne gently, "and it shone on us every night until my wedding day. Then the duke kept his threat and sent Robert out of France. He continued his studies in England and went into the army of Africa."

"There was a silence again."

"I did not see him until last year," said Madame de la Malne, "after my husband died."
